The need of a DIRECTORY or GUIDE BOOK for citizens and strangers, in so large and growing a community as New Haven, need not be argued here by the publisher. It is too evident to require any extended remark. In view of the convenience of such a work, the publisher takes pleasure in presenting the TENTH volume of his little book for their approval and patronage.

The most vigorous efforts have been made to render the present volume as complete as any work of this nature can be made. For this purpose, every dwelling, workshop, factory, and store has been visited, (and in many cases re-visited,) and every inquiry made to present a perfect Directory. Still, there are, undoubtedly, mistakes of a minor magnitude to be found in its pages. This can be accounted for only by the fact that many persons are disposed to give incorrect answers to inquiries of our agent; in some cases persons requesting that their names should not be given in the book; and in others there have been wrong directions purposely given. It certainly can not be expected that the canvasser should possess the attribute of omniscience—yet every error that querulous persons can detect is visited upon the publisher. The unusual number of changes for the past two or three years is another excuse for the few inaccuracies, comparatively, which occur,—changes in many instances made after the list of names had been prepared for the printer.

It is respectfully requested of all persons who may detect errors or omissions in the present volume, that they make the same known at the office of publication, where they will be noted in a book kept for that purpose.

In addition to other valuable matter given in the pages of the Directory, the publisher has compiled from authentic and reliable sources a list of DISTANCES and FARES by Rail Roads and Stages to and from the most principal places of interest to the New Haven public, which will be found both complete and convenient; and he would here return his sin-ere thanks to those gentlemen who have kindly assisted him in completing this additional department of his book.

It is the intention of the publisher to EMBELISH his work from year to year, with one or more of the most prominent public edifices in the City.

The accomplishment of this design will be attended with considerable expense; yet he trusts that the spirit which induces the outlay will be appreciated by his fellow citizens, and secure a more extended sale of the work. The first of the series is the New York and New Haven R. STATION HOUSE, [see description on page 7,] which will be recognized as a correct likeness of the building. The public are indebted to Mr. LOCKWOOD SANFORD, of this city, the delineator, for the correctness of the view, of this magnificent structure; so creditable to the Company under whose direction it was built.

The proprietor of the Directory need hardly call attention to his enlarged and improved MAP, which alone is worth nearly the price of the Directory. It will be found a correct and useful addition.

The publisher has been desirous of reducing the price of the Directory, but the limited sale of the work has not hitherto warranted the experiment. Whenever the sale shall be sufficiently increased to render a reduction safe, it will be cheerfully made; until then, he feels confident that his fellow-citizens will prefer paying a remunerating price, rather than ask him to labor for their accommodation, at a pecuniary sacrifice to himself.

Seeking the good will and coöperation of his fellow-citizens, in sustaining a work of acknowledged utility, he respectfully presents his little volume for their patronage.

NEW YORK AND NEW HAVEN RAIL ROAD STATION.

THIS beautiful edifice, an engraved representation of which will be found on another page, is situated in Union street, and occupies the entire square from Chapel to Cherry street,—being 300 feet in length. The style of architecture is Italian. The front of the building is toward the East, with a Tower at either end, each 25 feet square,—the one at the South end being 82 feet in height, while that at the North rises to an altitude of 140 feet above the pavement in Chapel street, and 156 feet above the track of the rail road. In this latter Tower are the Engineer's room, and the office of the Company, as also other convenient and useful apartments. The main or center edifice is a parallelogram, 100 feet in depth, with a floor or platform 76 by 82 feet, suspended from the roof by numerous strong iron rods. This portion of the building is united to the North and South Towers, by connecting Wings 52 feet in width.

The grand entrance for passengers is from Union street, by a spacious doorway into the center building. On either side of the main hall or platform, are extensive Parlors,—that on the left being for the accommodation of ladies, and is furnished with a profusion of rich and costly sofas, divans, chairs, ottomans, mirrors, &c., with convenient dressing rooms attached. Obliging servants are always in attendance. The Parlor on the right is for gentlemen's use, and is to be furnished as a Reading Room.

The Rail Road Track, which is 16 feet below the floor of the building, is reached by easy flights of stairs, on the right and left of the principal entrance, inside the building. The descent to the track of the New Haven and Northampton (or the Canal) Rail Road, is from the West side of the Platform, directly opposite the main entrance. The Ticket Office is on the left side of the grand hall, with ornamental windows of ground glass, one of which opens into the Ladies' Parlor.

Beside the Parlors, there are, in the connecting Wings and South Tower, several large and commodious rooms, to be occupied for various purposes connected with the business of the Company.

The height of the building, from the pavement in Union street to the eaves, is 21 feet, with a spacious square dome in the center, rising to the height of 64 feet above the floor.

In the North Tower, at an elevation of 90 feet above the street, is a clock, with glazed faces 8 feet in diameter, looking toward the four cardinal points. This clock is to be illuminated with gas, so that the hour of the night may be distinctly seen from all directions. Twenty feet above the clock, a large bell is suspended, the ringing of which indicates the arrival and departure of the trains of cars on the New York and New Haven, as well as the New Haven and Northampton, and the New Haven, Hartford and Springfield Rail Roads, all of which radiate from this central point. A watchman being stationed in the building at night, this bell is usually the first to sound its note of alarm in cases of fire.

From the belfry of this lofty tower, lifted 140 feet above the neighboring streets, a most extensive and picturesque view of the city and surrounding country may be had. The spectator looks down on a forest of luxuriant elms, maples, &c., intermingled with which are the stately mansions, beautiful cottages, towering spires, and tasteful gardens of our silvan city.

The design of this beautiful structure, which reflects the highest credit on the architect, the builders, the Company, and the City, was furnished by HENRY AUSTIN, Esq., and the building was erected by Messrs. BISHOP and MILLER. Its cost to the Rail Road Company was upwards of $40,000. Long may it stand, as an enduring monument to the taste, the liberality and the enterprise of its projectors.

We are preparing and have on hand as handsome Sofas of this kind as can be found in this city or elsewhere, of any kind, being a good Spring Bed, which can be altered by a child, from a Sofa to a Bed, in one minute, and returned to a Sofa in the same time.
